"UNEASY TERMS"

Cruelywed Comedy #1

Paul Weigel an employee in an office, is urged by his wife to seek advancement. He is backward, not knowing how to go about it.

While Weigel is at the office his wife reads an article on how to ask for a raise. She telephones Weigel, instructing him to invite the boss home to dinner that night. She puts her plan into effect by having the house completely refurnished on the installment plan; having her beautiful niece act as maid, and the niece's sweetheart act as butler and chauffeur.

The boss and Weigel are driven home in a beautiful car by the supposed-to-be chauffeur.

Weigel is surprised at his wife's arrangements. A fine dinner is served after which drinks are indulged in in the adjoining room and the possibilities of an advance for Weigel are discussed. The boss decides to propose Weigel for a higher position at the next Meeting of the Board of Directors.

Trouble arrives in the form of the furniture dealer from whom they have hired their house furnishings for the occasion, and he claims their credit is of no value and starts moving the furniture out on them. Room after room is cleared out, and all the while the party keeps going from one room to another.

To make matters worse, the costumer from whom Weigel has rented his dress suit, arrives. He also claims Weigel's credit is no good and strips Weigel of the suit.

To cover matters up, Mrs. Weigel plays the victrola and forces the boss to dance with her, but finally the moving men take the victrola away too, and she is compelled to admit to the boss that it is all a bluff. He in turn confesses that he is the owner of the furniture store, etc., and is aware of their plan. He thinks the matter over and then decides to give Weigel a $5,000 a year raise. The beautiful niece rides away with the boss in an automobile and this concludes "Uneasy Terms".
